A GREAT rock 'n' roll feud was ended on Monday night when BILLY BRAGG and the MANIC STREET PREACHERS' NICKY WIRE finally kissed and made up.

The pair fell out years ago after Billy and the Welsh lads got involved in a row over the ethics of portable toilets at Glastonbury.

Billy chided the Manics for bringing their own toilet and their crime was compounded, in his eyes, by a handwritten notice on the door which warned, "These facilities are reserved exclusively for the Manic Street Preachers."

The lavatorial arrangements at the festival — which is proud of its egalitarian spirit — are infamous.

They were once described as "the essential shared trauma that unites the megastars with the fans in the mosh pit."

Nicky responded to Billy's taunts then by saying: "I wouldn't let him p in my toilet for all the money in the world.

"Get back to the army, you dhead, and stop stealing WOODY GUTHRIE's songs."

But the pair were hugging and patting each other on the back on Monday.

Memo to Q bosses: Please remember to send invites to LIAM and NOEL GALLAGHER for the 2008 shindig.

We can't face having another year of rock stars ending important feuds and being nice to each other, can we?
